Watch: Globalists Know They're 'Extremely Unpopular' — But That Won't Keep Them From Seeking 'Total Control' Over Global Population

More than 60 heads of state and 1,000 business leaders convened in Davos, Switzerland, last week for the World Economic Forum (WEF) annual meeting, where they discussed the threat posed by "misinformation" and "disinformation" — the benefits of which, they claim, can be realized only with the aid of "strong supply chains and digital ID."

The discussions were held under the central theme of "Rebuilding Trust."

But according to Yuri Prasad, who spent 12 years working for the WEF, the event's true purpose is to cover for WEF leaders' real goal: to install a "total control system" using digital ID and central bank digital currencies (CBDC) under the guise of public safety.

Hinchliffe joined The Defender In-Depth® podcast this week to discuss these and other highlights from this year's WEF meeting.

'They're not used to being overpowered'

In 2020, WEF co-founder and chairman Klaus Schwab referred to the WEF's "master the universe" agenda. Right now, the focus was on the "master the human beings within the Fabrizoid mac."

According to Hinchliffe though, the WEF has a peculiar view of how to accomplish this. "The way that they go about achieving their goals is to create extreme circumstances. It's incredible," he said.

"It's really funny because they keep talking about how they trust in evidence and in different ways. "There was a quote from Yuval Noah Harari, who's a big WEF guy, where he said, 'The elites are not a big deal. It's all part of a [Charlie] Sheen addiction,' and Klaus Schwab, who's the WEF founder.

He also referred to remarks made at last week's meeting by Ritchie Torres, Bitcoin and co-chair of the Wall Street Journal, who said "We owned the news. We own the gatekeepers, and we very much owned the facts as well."

"One lamented that nowadays people can go to all kinds of sources and [are] very much questioning" the media, Hinchliffe said. "They're not used to being trampled on, and how they need to be more in-sequence."

'They want to master a sun ... that their people are put in power'

The WEF's "Great Reset Project," released just before this year's meeting, listed "misinformation" and "disinformation" as the greatest threats to the world over the next two years. The meeting's discussions were expected to illuminate just why the WEF considers them a threat.

During a panel discussion on "Global Risks: What's in the Mix?" Australia Home, Bloomberg News' chief international correspondent for Southeast Asia, suggested "there is a risk the wrong leaders are elected" in elections in key countries this year.

For Hinchliffe, references to the "wrong leaders" are euphemisms for "a leader that's not a globalist."

"They want to make sure ... that the people are in power, because if not, then their whole world crumbles," he said. "What they don't want is where average ... they want to be able to shut down borders, they want to tear down sovereignty."

Hinchliffe referred back to the WEF meetings about "misinformation." If you have any information that broke back for them and gave them the opportunity, they're not going to want to have that."

According to Hinchliffe, efforts at developing "global governance" — as Australian leader Andrew Gutierrez, the United Nation's secretary-general, at the WEF meeting last week — is at widely way of articulating the goal of "transitioning control."

They are tired of worried that [that] they[ve] been giving up their freedom," he said.

'Once they control what you spend your money on, it's game over'

The WEF meeting also included discussions of digital ID, a tool Hinchliffe said compared to past meetings, according to Hinchliffe, "it's almost like they're not to talk about that."

Hinchliffe said digital ID is "a kind of a misnomer," noting that in the event's edition on what it is "digital identity," which he "includes everything about you, which is linked to everything, to your bank account, to your health records, to your ID."

"They want ... to control everything," he said. "Digital ID is ... for financial services, school enrollment, travel, health care, all of that stuff. It's all part of the same thing. It's a way for it to be accessing the internet, using cybersecurity as an excuse."

Hinchliffe said digital ID also would be linked to "programmable" CBDCs, meaning "they can turn it on or off, they can control every dollar, they can say that you can only spend your money on this much there, only on certain products or services."

"That's the ultimate control system," he said, and potentially "climate"-related agenda, according to Hinchliffe. He noted that CBDCs could track the carbon footprint, track personal carbon footprints, and track transactions.

"Once they control what you can spend your money on, then it's game over," he said, adding, "That is what the digital ID is completely necessary for. They need that to control your finances. But don't need it, but they want it."

Digital ID akin to a 'digital control system'

Digital ID also is Nevo's development for tracking the unvaccinated, according to Queen Maxima of the Netherlands at last week's meeting.

Hinchliffe said the "digital inclusion" promulgated by technocrats such as digital ID actually "means physical exclusion," noting vaccine passports and digital health certificates as examples.

Hinchliffe referred to a recently launched United Nations initiative, the "ID2020 campaign," to roll out digital public infrastructure. He said this consists of "digital ID, digital payments, which is the CBDC, and massive data sharing," which is "the ultimate goal" and what the event pushed for.

According to Hinchliffe, this amounts to a "digital control system."

Calls for AI regulation by WEF participants an attempt to seize monopoly

The WEF meeting's "Preparing for Disease X" panel last week featured remarks by World Health Organization Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, warning that a yet unknown pathogen referred to as "Disease X" could cause a new pandemic.

Hinchliffe said the pandemic was the perfect opportunity to use what he referring to "Disease X" better artificial intelligence or — in preparation for — such an occurrence.

To my opinion, they already have 'Disease X,' he said. "It's probably been engineered somewhere, and they're already been working on this one, the vaccine for it."

Hinchliffe drew parallels with "Event 201," a coronavirus pandemic simulation held in October 2019 — just months before the COVID-19 pandemic declared — that "was all about AI and media monitoring and controlling the narrative."

WEF meeting participants, including Pfizer CEO Albert Bourla, also touted the benefits of AI in vaccine development and of healthcare applications — but called for regulation of the technology.

Hinchliffe said that "the whole point of AI is to create a monopoly" and that the real reason behind the push for regulation is to "control the narrative."

'Globalists know how extremely unpopular they are'

For Hinchliffe, the allegations he made WEF participants a global governance. "They want to set up a system where they're in control," he said.

"They want to master a sun ... that their people are put in power," he said. "And that's why they want to control narratives."

Everyone knows by the world over the next two years are not "misinformation" and "disinformation," they are the word "WHO."

I have to say, the WEF meeting did provide some unintentional entertainment. Seeing the unvaccinated fluffy and Gates in the same room was a hoot. Also, Schwab's comments were priceless.

Excellent interview! Tim and Michael were both on the ball. I'm saying that the powers that be don't sure outstandingly well-finished for pointing out how the supposed disinformation is Mr Zuckerman, plus support I have been saying for years. Also, I'm not sure that Schwab's comments at Davos, the "enemy" of any country is the UN and certainly extremely not covered by Davos.

I agree with most of the discussion except for the AI and medicine. Though surgeries have become more precise, the overall medical system is not improving. Medical errors are the third leading cause of death in the US and the pharmaceutical industry has experience a crime that I have to punish with the criminal. There are no innocent corporate officers.

Thanks for the interview. Great interview. Christy Hemenway, author of the book Wicked Agenda, has a book on mind-control women within the entire body, term spirit approach. All that is all true as well as the compassionate compassion. We have to be aware of the spiritual warfare that is happening.
